

The Marconi
Society

young scholars

Seeking promising young scholars who are doing outstanding research in networking and communications!

The Marconi Society, a foundation dedicated to advancements in the Internet and communications that benefit humankind, proudly offers the annual Paul Baran Young Scholar Award.

This award recognizes a diverse group of young scientists and engineers with the potential to make extraordinary contributions in the field of information and communications science.

We invite nominations through February 15, 2019.

The award confers these benefits:

- Inspirational Networking: Young Scholars network with luminaries, including Vint Cerf, Marty Cooper and Len Kleinrock, who have deep connections into a range of industries.
- International Recognition: The Young Scholar award gives instant credibility to a researcher's work and provides a global platform to share research and to discover collaborators.
- Social Impact: Marconi Fellows and Young Scholars directly mentor and engage with students in developing countries to use technology to solve important social issues.
- Leadership Opportunities: Young Scholars take an active role in running their own organization by taking on officer roles, serving on committees and participating in events.

Awardees also receive a $5000 cash prize and $1000 in expenses to attend the annual symposium and award recognition dinner.

We welcome nominations for students with demonstrated outstanding research capability, entrepreneurial spirit and technical vision, by February 15, 2019.